

Project ISLaND June Update

Student Projects:

We were delighted to see two of our undergraduate students present their dissertation projects as posters at the UCL Psychology Summer Festival. Their research focused on analysing data coded from video recordings of parent-child interactions. It was wonderful to see them discuss their work with fellow students and staff.

Publication Progress:

Our paper on caregiver wellbeing has now been published in the Journal of Autism and Developmental Disorders (JADD). To learn more about the study and its findings, visit the Publications page, where you can access a written summary, a video overview, and a link to the full article.

Looking ahead to June, we hope to submit two more research papers for publication, and to present findings from Project ISLaND at another conference. Keep an eye out for updates!
